Delta has been notified by the National Mediation Board that it has rejected the claims of interference filed by the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers (IAM) following the November 2010 representation election for Delta TechOps Stores employees. This means that the Stores vote for no IAM representation stands.

“Since the merger’s close, our people have expressed the desire to move forward as one team,” said Tony Charaf, president-Delta TechOps. “We are pleased that the voices and votes of our professional men and women in TechOps were heard. Now we can immediately begin the process of aligning pay, benefits and work rules for our people.”

On Nov. 18 the NMB also denied the Association of Flight Attendants’ (AFA) claims of interference following the November 2010 Delta flight attendant representation election. Interference claims are still pending relating to the representation elections for fleet service and passenger service employees.
